

The Insane President!

By J. Speer-Williams

As a patriotic American, I had long anticipated America becoming the hope of the world; but instead, she has become its scourge.

If you were to ask me ...

Do you support capitalism?

I would say ...

I surely do not support usury-based capitalism, run by the international bankers, which makes them and their minions rich, but most others poor.

I support free enterprise, without usury. Usury enslaves, while free enterprise, without usury, not only frees people, but helps to make them prosperous.

Why has the term capitalism been conflated with the positive concepts of free enterprise?

For the same reason free trade deals are called free. For the same reason patriots are called fascists.

Such a perversion in terminology, such a misuse of words, is meant to deceive. The mass deception of the general public is rather easy when one owns and controls the major news media and publishing houses that produce dictionaries. You see, it's an old commie trick to redefine words until any sensible or rational communication is all but impossible.

Who owns and controls this dark tyranny?

The International Banking usurers own and control the seven mega-corporations that own and control ninety percent of the mainstream media are the source of American tyranny.

The bankers also control the American institutions of Hollywood, TV, politics, education, churches, government, foundations, think-tanks, and the US surveillance state, and they are the progenitors and promoters of political correctness and the kids of antifa.*

**The ignorant children of the antifa movement have defaulted to hate; and like all criminals, accuse others of what they themselves are guilty.*

And it is those usurious money changers who use their media to trade on the positive aspects of free enterprise, by making people think capitalism is free enterprise: while the only thing free about capitalism is the freedom it gives the warring psychopaths to kill or enslave us with usury.

Laissez-faire commerce is free enterprise that asks no favors from government other than to ensure a level playing field in all individual, private, commercial, and industrial business transactions. Such free enterprise is also known as the free market, private enterprise, and as is erroneously promoted – capitalism.

Capitalism is the means of creating money out of free air, lending it to governments, with repayment and usurious interest rates attached.

The source of US money – free air

You think it sounds impossible? I know what you mean, but it is a sad fact of life.

The literal definition of laissez-faire (from the French) is leave to be, which was a message to a monarch from private businessmen who had long grown exasperated with their government's constant interference in private business affairs. These entrepreneurs were not asking for special governmental favors, but were instead were asking the US government to cease the favoritism being granted to the International Bankers of Europe, controlled by the infamous Rothschild Cartel.

The most egregious and insane governmental concession was allowing the foreign and private banking capitalists the power to create money out of thin air, to loan it to our federal government, and then to demand repayment of the principal, plus a usurious rate of interest.

One can easily see that in order to pay any part of that growing debt, national governments would have to take two nation-defeating actions.

Tax their citizens

Borrow more money

And as such governments sink ever deeper into debt to the criminal international bankers, those central governments are left with three options.

Tax their citizens more heavily, and institute severe austerity measures that eliminate all social welfare programs and infrastructure maintenance

Or ...

Borrow even more money

Or ...

Arrest the bankers for the criminal frauds they are and issue governmental money with no repayment or interest involved

The third option above, however, carries the heavy penalty of war from the nations trapped in the usurious grip of the international bankers.

It is ironical that the United States of America is the only country in history to have broken away from the bankers' English war machine and then become the bankers' most destructive enforcement arm ever known.

Shock and Awe

By virtue of the ownership and control of the Western media, the bankers tell us that their terrible destruction of nations is altruistic because of one or both of the two reasons below.

Those nations have cruel leaders and/or

Those nations foster terrorism, which is a threat to the world, particularly the Western world

Of course what is never revealed by the Western media is the fact that the banker-controlled US/NATO combine of nations secretly creates, funds, equips, and directs various terrorist factions to make war on those sane nations that refuse to subjugate or enslave themselves or others in the Rothschild death trap, as America did long ago. It is not that the American and European nations are forcing their values onto the world, but the Rothschilds using the US/NATO militaries to force usury their on the world.

The US/NATO empire, however, has run its wicked course, while the axis of Russia and China has begun its ascension.

Blindly, the current Rothschild war plan for global dominance is as simple as it is remarkably stupid: eliminate both Russia and China as world-class military powers by using Ukraine, Syria, North Korea, or Iran as flash points for a nuclear war with Russia.

Apparently, the Rothschilds and their minions in the Deep States of the US/NATO empire have not yet realized that Russia, unlike Iraq, Afghanistan, Lebanon, Libya, and Syria, matches, if not exceeds, the military prowess of America and Europe put together.

Long ago, when the Soviet Union was perhaps the most evil empire on record, the American seer Edgar Cayce predicted that Russia would come out of its Rothschild inspired and financed communist nightmare to become the hope of the world.

Healing of the physical without the change in the mental and spiritual aspects brings little real help to the individual in the end. How true, because the mind and the body imprint and imitate each other. What we think, we become. What we become, we think. It's an insidious process that can predispose us to illness or it can lead us to health.

— Edgar Cayce —

AZ QUOTES

As a patriotic American, I had long hoped that America would become the hope of the world, but instead she has become its scourge.

A fundamental transformation of America began during the 1861 to 1865 years of President Abraham Lincoln's term of office.

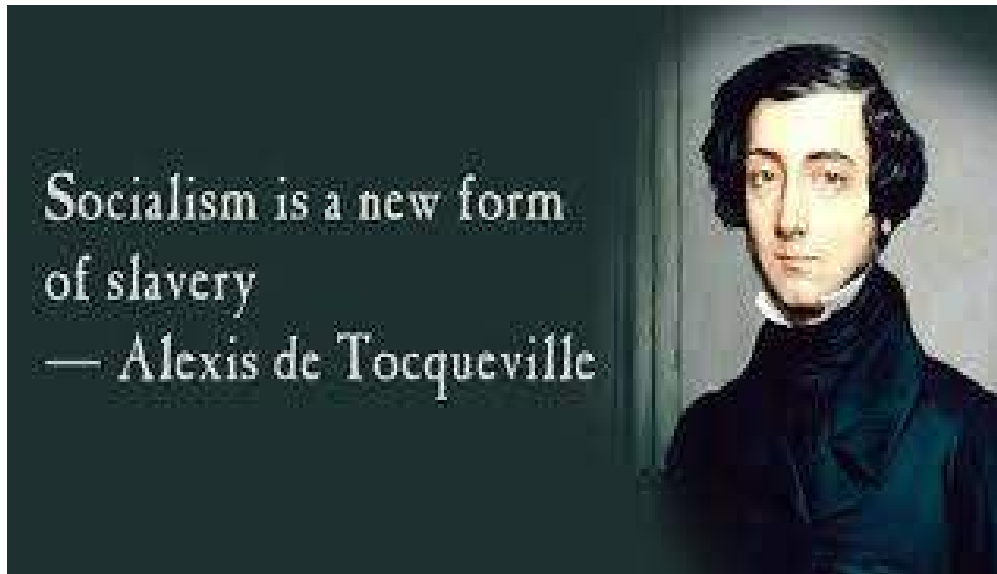

It was then that the Rothschilds' warmonger, Abraham Lincoln, guaranteed the bankers a nation without any sovereign states that held the powers of nullification (for their individual states).

In other words, no longer would our states hold the US Constitution power to nullify any of the unjust and unconstitutional laws of the central government for themselves. It was the era that America took a hard turn into the dark, without ever turning back into the light. It has been a devilish realm where Rothschild capitalism has freely reigned.

Lincoln's war victory indirectly handed the United States to the Rothschilds' death-dealing, poverty-generating, usury contrivance of a capitalist's controlled socialism.

America is great because she is good. If America ceases to be good, America will cease to be great.

Alexis de Tocqueville (1805-1859)

The Civil War was purposely and cleverly misnamed from the very beginning of the War Between the States. A civil war is a war waged by militants who want to take over a standing government. The Southern states wanted no part of the federal government of America, with its high tariffs of goods imported from Europe.

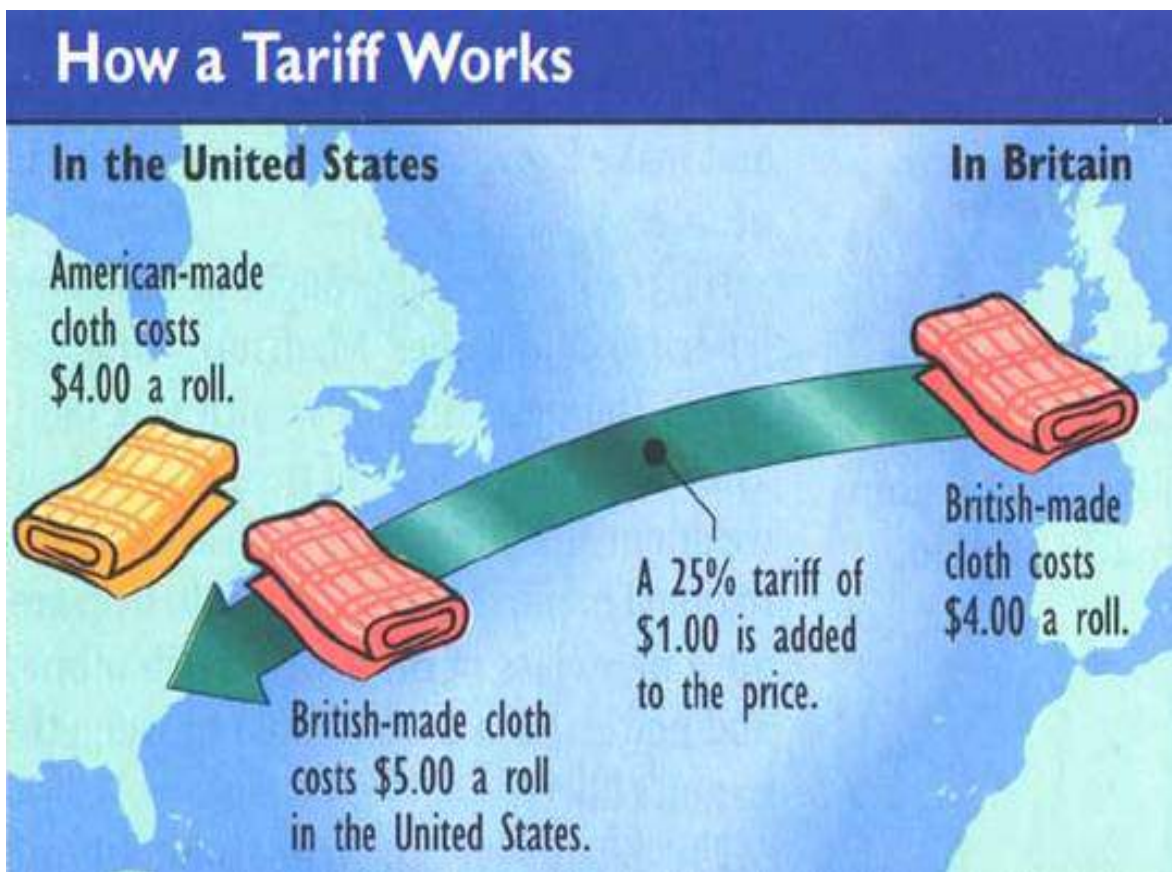

The reasons for what is sometimes called the War to Prevent Southern Independence were the protective tariffs imposed on imported goods by Northern industrialists, who were financed and controlled by the Rothschild banking cartel.

The Tariff of 1816 was America's first obvious protective tariff with the explicit purpose of giving the Northern industrialists an unfair advantage over their European competition. This tax on imports forced most Americans to buy the cheaper homemade items produced in the northern and western states.

The agricultural antebellum states in the South, however, were hard hit by the Tariff of 1816.

The major consumers of the South's cotton, tobacco, rice, and hemp were the European countries, who quickly retaliated when learning of the US Tariff of 1816 by imposing their own tariffs on all American imports; and there went most of the markets the Southern plantation owners depended on.

Tariffs are a dangerous national policy, as they can easily lead to a trade war, and then a hot war. In fact, the US Tariff of 1816 did lead to a trade war, and then on to a hot shooting war, albeit an internal one.

For twelve years after the passage of the legislation authorizing the Tariff of 1816, the relationship between the Northern states and those of the South continued to worsen. But instead of instituting reconciliation measures to avoid hostilities, President John Quincy Adams took the opposite tack. In 1828, Adams and the US Congress drafted and passed an abomination of a tariff bill that was over forty percent harsher on the South, the Tariff of 1828. This legislation was so intolerable to Southern leaders, they uniformly called it the Tariff of Abominations. And it was. America had turned away from being good and she would pay a hefty price for that mistake. Christians would soon be killing more of their own kind than in all of America's future and past wars combined.

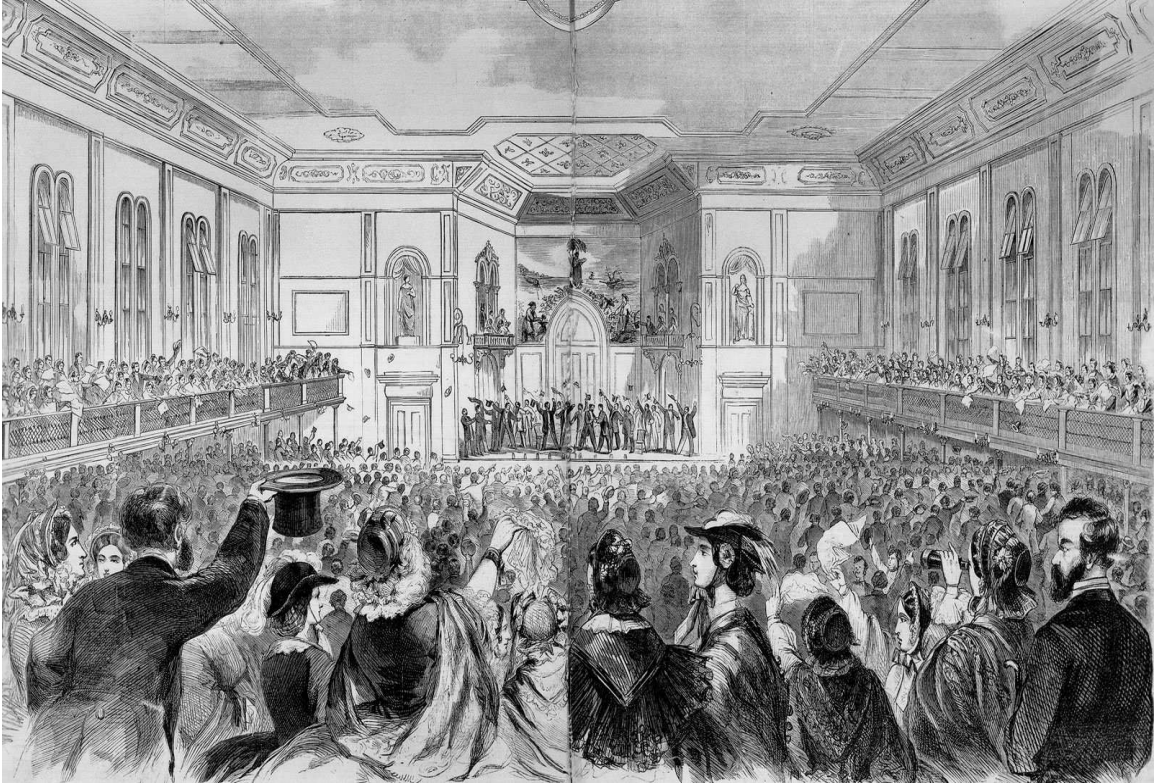

An entire generation of young men would soon become cannon fodder due to the incompetence and raw evil of much older men in the US Capitol of Washington, DC.

The Lost Generation

Leading this demonic amalgamation of protective tariff supporters was our sixteenth president, Abraham Lincoln. The man even bragged he was an avid Henry Clay-Whig Party advocate. As the leader of the Whig political party, Henry Clay was well known as being in the deep pockets of the Northern industrialists, with his support of protective tariffs.

On November 6, 1860, when Abe Lincoln won the White House, the Southern assemblage of concerned leaders knew their constituents would not receive any small relief from the erroneous US tariffs with Lincoln as president. Forty-three days later, the sovereign state government of South Carolina exercised their rights under the US Constitution and drafted an ... Ordinance of Secession from the Union.

South Carolinians celebrate their Ordinance of Secession

The South Carolina secession was quickly followed by the sovereign states of Mississippi, Florida, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, and Louisiana.

On February 8, 1861, governmental representatives of the above states announced the formation of the Confederate States of America, with its capital in Montgomery, Alabama.

As part of a newly formed sovereign nation (CSA), the governor of South Carolina repeatedly asked the now foreign government in Washington, DC, to remove its military troops from Fort Sumter, South Carolina.

Outgoing Pennsylvania Democratic president James Buchanan told the US Congress that he did not believe that the federal government had the right to stop states from seceding from the Union. But at the same time, he did not remove his Union troops from Fort Sumter, leaving that momentous decision to his soon-to-be successor, Mr. Abraham Lincoln.

Then on February 4, 1861, thirty-three states sponsored a hopeful Peace Convention at the Willard Hotel in Washington, where former president John Tyler was to be the presiding officer.

President John Tyler

By mid-February, the Convention delivered a set of peace proposals to Congress, which those sordid degenerates ignored. The stage was set for the man with a plan.

On March the 4th, Mr. Lincoln was sworn into office and he assumed a responsibility that he abused like no president before or since.

Mr. Lincoln not only ignored South Carolina's pleas for the removal of US troops from Fort Sumter, he sent by ship supplies down the Atlantic Coast to fortify Fort Sumter.

Now, the South had to respond quickly before the supplies arrived at Fort Sumter. After all, the CSA (Confederate States of America) was a small nation with less than ten million citizens, with little to no industrial output to wage war.

Fort Sumter, South Carolina

The Confederate military took over Fort Sumter with no loss of life. But Lincoln had his casus belli and held the CSA responsible by firing on federal authority at Fort Sumter. Lincoln's war would cost humanity over 750,000

Christian lives. It was a terrible, bloody Christians-killing-Christians war that never should have happened.

It has been said that the so-called Civil War was a crossroads of our national being, whatever that is meant to mean. But there can be no denying that the war wiped out an entire generation of young men, by a man who seemed to love war, but never fought in one or served a day in military service.

Lincoln often quoted the Bible, but he caused his fellow Christians to slaughter their fellow Christians.

What madness drove Lincoln to pursue such carnage?

Perchance Hillary Mayell, writing for the National Geographic News (see her article below), will give us some insight into the complex mind of Honest Ole Abe Lincoln.

Did Mercury in "Little Blue Pills" Make Abraham Lincoln Erratic?

Hillary Mayell
for National Geographic News
July 17, 2001

Tales of the melancholia that dogged U.S. President Abraham Lincoln at various times during his life have been documented by historians and biographers and in Lincoln's own correspondence.

Whether he suffered from a full-blown case of what today is called clinical depression is unknown. What is known, however, is that for a while, Lincoln took little blue pills to treat his condition.

Known as "blue mass," the little blue pills were a 19th-century staple. They were prescribed for a host of ailments, including apoplexy, worms, child-bearing, tuberculosis, toothaches, and constipation.

The key ingredient was mercury—and the medication was well on its way to poisoning Lincoln when he stopped taking it in 1861, says a team of researchers in a study published in the Summer 2001 issue of Perspectives in Biology and Medicine.

"Cave of Gloom"

Lincoln lived in what a friend called "a cave of gloom." His melancholy "was a matter of frequent discussion among his friends," wrote William H. Herndon, Lincoln's law partner and biographer.

Norbert Hirschhorn, a medical historian and the lead author of the new study, said of Lincoln: "There seem to be clear, qualitative changes in his underlying behavior during the 1850's. The gloom becomes impenetrable. He becomes subject to towering rages and outbursts of bizarre behavior—jumping up suddenly and running out of the house for no reason, bursts of inappropriate laughter."

To document the changes in Lincoln's behavior, the authors of the study cited numerous accounts of friends and fellow lawyers who traveled the legal circuit with the man who became the 16th U.S. President.

Lincoln's leaps to rage could be terrifying. One contemporary described his face in anger as "lurid with majestic and terrifying wrath." Another described him as

"so angry that he looked like Lucifer in an uncontrollable rage."

During an 1858 debate with Stephen Douglas, his rival for a seat in the U.S. Senate, Lincoln became so enraged that he grabbed a former aide and shook him until his teeth chattered.

"Mercury poisoning certainly could explain Lincoln's known neurological symptoms: insomnia, tremor, and the rage attacks," said Robert G. Feldman, a professor of neurology, pharmacology, and environmental health at Boston University's School of Medicine and Public Health, who was a co-author of the scientific report.

The reconstructed "blue pill" was a round gray pellet the size of a peppercorn. If taken at the normally prescribed dose of the time—one pill two or three times a day—it would deliver nearly 9,000 times the amount of mercury* that is deemed safe for people by current health standards.

**Mad as a hatter is a colloquial term used to suggest a person has gone insane from their mercury exposure in hat-making. Mercury poisoning is known to cause nervousness, mood swings, irritability anger, and other emotional changes. Such mercury poisoning has always been difficult to reverse.*

Perhaps Lincoln was not insane. It is, however, difficult to deny that he was emotionally disturbed.

Was Lincoln's war one in which White men killed White men to free Black men?

No, and Lincoln said so many times.

In his first Presidential inaugural address, Lincoln stated ...

I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the states where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so. And I have no inclination to do so.

In an earlier debate with Stephen Douglas, Lincoln said ...

I will say then, I am not, nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social or politic equality of the White and Black races. I am not now or ever have been in making voters or jurors of negroes, or of qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with White people.

And I will say in addition to this, that there is a physical difference between the Black and White races, which I believe will forever forbid the two races from living together on terms of social and political equality. And in as much as they cannot so live while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior. And, I as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the White race.

Following are random statements concerning Blacks made by Lincoln during his political career.

There is a natural disgust ... for the idea of the mixture of the White and Black races.

A separation of the races is the only perfect preventative of amalgamation.

As long as Blacks continue to live with Whites, they constitute a threat to the natural life. Family life may also collapse and the increase of mixed breed bastards may, someday, challenge the supremacy of the White man.

The war was going against the Union on the 22nd of August, 1862. In a letter of that date, President Lincoln wrote to Horace Greeley and the New York Tribune, in which the President said ...

If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it. And if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it. And if I could save it by freeing some but leaving others alone, I'd also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I think it helps in saving the Union.

One month later, on September 22, 1862, Lincoln had decided to go with the third option in his letter to Horace Greeley: he would free some slaves, but not all.

Lincoln issued a preliminary warning that he would order the emancipation of all slaves in any state that did not end its rebellion against the Union by January 1, 1863.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued as an EO (Executive Order) and was explicitly written to give life to the Union Army's failing war efforts.

Lincoln knew the Southern slaves were aiding the Confederation's military by doing the heavy, dirty work of digging trenches, cutting wood, and carrying ammunition and water. Lincoln also expected 200,000 slaves would escape to the Union lines and join his Northern Army.

Lincoln writing his EO, which historians have called the Emancipation Proclamation

President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation was a strategic stroke of military genius, and it came from a man who had never served in the military. But President Lincoln's Proclamation can hardly be thought of as being one of the world's most humanitarian efforts, as the EO only freed the three million slaves in the Confederacy, but it did not free the one million slaves* outside of the Confederacy.

**The Thirteenth Amendment to the US Constitution finally abolished slavery in America.*

Had Lincoln really wanted to free the slaves he could have gone a long way in achieving that end, with much less lost of lives and treasure.

By the time Lincoln had assumed the presidency, slavery was dying a natural death in the Western world, as not being economically viable.

It cost the southern plantation owners more money to purchase, house, feed, cloth, and attend to medically, for the life of their slaves than what the industrialists spent with their low-salaried workers (often children), who labored for barely livable wages and were then thrown on the dungheap if they got sick.

If President Lincoln had pushed for legislation for the US government to buy the Southern slaves from the plantation owners and then freed them, he could have done a great good with far less money and death than what his war ended up costing Americans then and all Americans today. Please understand that the cost to Americans, ever since the Lincoln presidency, is not limited to the expense, destruction, injury, and deaths of his war. Lincoln burnt the template of how wantonly and cruelly tyrannical our future White House denizens could behave, with them all destroying parts of our Constitutional States' Rights.

Lincoln imprisoned over 3,000 northern citizens who spoke out against his war, thus setting an example of what future presidents could get away with in times of war.

Additionally, Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus, thus granting to himself the enormous power to indefinitely hold anyone as prisoner without trial.

Lincoln had Northern newspaper editors arrested, and went so far as to actually draft a warrant for the arrest of Chief Justice Roger Taney.

Lincoln, the Great Dictator, even instituted a national income tax, to finance his war, against great and righteous opposition.

President Lincoln brought about the beginning of the end of the Constitution's decentralization of central governmental power: the Separation of Powers and States' Rights.

From Lincoln to Eisenhower the once sovereign states of America have lost power, until day, the very term States' Rights is a pejorative.

Just on the subject of Executive Orders (EOs), Lincoln breached the separation of powers guaranteed by the US Constitution by making laws with his orders, when presidents are only empowered to enforce the legislation passed by the American peoples' representative Congress.

In just four years in office, Lincoln issued forty-eight Executive Orders, while Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and J. Q. Adams, combined, issued just twenty-six EOs during forty years of Office.

With Abraham Lincoln as an early despotic example and excuse, his following American presidents have collectively issued over 16,000 EOs, most being overreaching, and likely totaling hundreds of thousands of pages.

With so many Executive Orders becoming the law of the land, our White House has become the House of Rothschild – and the oppressive results of the federal government prove it.

Out of EOs have grown even more sinister presidential orders, some are even confidential. In that way Americans can be imprisoned by breaking laws they don't even know exist.*

**Today Americans are burden with thousands of pages of Presidential Review Directives (PRDs), Presidential Decision Directives (PDDs), National Security Reviews (NSRs), National Security Directives (NSDs), National Security Presidential Directives (NSPDs) and even Homeland Security Directives, all having the full force and effect of law, and all in addition to EOs. Are you in danger of being arrested because you are in violation of any of the above laws?*

Executive Orders should be kept to the internal affairs of the Executive Branch of government, while major policy initiatives should come from Congress.

The Rothschild control of America took a great leap forward as Lincoln began the process of making the office of the presidency tyrannical as he took unprecedented actions and steps outside the bounds of his office. The Rothschilds knew it would be far easier to control one power center (the US presidency) than fifty sovereign states.

One may wonder why scholarly propagandists and cover-up artists in universities and in the publishing world hide the terrible mistakes of Lincoln. I believe Professor Thomas J. DiLorenzo, PhD has the answer: They use their Lincoln mythology to advocate big government and other imperialistic wishes for the federal government. They say ...

If Honest Abe did it, it must be OK.

Whoosises? They are the ones who reveal their abiding prejudice by their cavalier treatment of Lincoln.

But most of all, modern academics abhor the concept of allowing our states any real sovereignty. Such men and women do not seem to understand that the closer the ruling class is to its people, the more they care for those people.

Presidents Thomas Jefferson and James Madison felt that our states had the right to nullify (for their own states) unconstitutional laws. With such rights for our states, New York, California, and Illinois would soon be empty of hard-working, tax-paying citizens. And the poor homeless of such states would not be the problem, they would be the result of the problem – their states.

With sovereign states, no longer could the federal government tell the world ...

Do as we say, or we'll bring democracy (along with a lot of bombs) to your country.

But despite the destruction the Executive Branch of government has done to American ideals, an equal, or exceeding amount of ruin has been done to Americans by the other two branches of government: the legislative and judicial. The US Congress, Supreme Court, and the entire federal court system have all become embarrassments to those who have studied them.

Even the senior officers in our Army, Marine Corps, Air Force, and Navy are rabid Rothschild acolytes. They are stay-at-home militarists who have never experienced combat, but set in motion the propaganda they absorb at such schools as the US Army Command and General Staff College.

Most military officers, who have seen combat, have too much innate integrity to sell their souls for rank, privilege, and power.

America continued her hard turn into the darkest of shadows with all of the presidents who succeeded Lincoln. Such men as Theodore Roosevelt, our 26th president, like Lincoln, is widely considered one of our best and greatest presidents. He is even enshrined, like Lincoln, on Mount Rushmore. Roosevelt used the White House as his “bully pulpit” to issue more Executive Orders than all twenty presidents (other than Lincoln) who preceded him.

President Theodore Roosevelt

Teddy Roosevelt even formed a national police force, an idea that had always been rejected by US Congresses, and was abhorred by our nation's founding fathers, and the American public as well.

By President Roosevelt calling his national police force an innocent investigative bureau of his branch of government, Teddy was able to avoid wide public resistance to his addition to America's growing police state. In those days, citizens were wisely antipathetic to national police forces. Today, however, there is scarcely a US citizen who would suggest we do away with Teddy's FBI, or even curb its bestial illegal practices.

But the worse was yet to come, but come he did. His name was Thomas Woodrow Wilson. And as our 28th president, Wilson imprisoned some 5,000 Americana who objected to his World War I, the war he had promised to avoid if he was elected as our president.

President Woodrow Wilson

It was Wilson who was the first to declare National Emergencies, in order to assume even more powers not granted to the Executive Branch, by either our Constitution or our Congress.

It was during the Woodrow Wilson administration that the Rothschilds instituted their Federal Reserve Act brought back income taxes, and then caused the American entrance into World War I.

Later came Woodrow Wilson on steroids. His name was Franklin D. Roosevelt, who died while in office, but not before issuing over 3,000 Executive Orders and making sure America got into World War II.

But why should I go on in this vain, as all subsequent presidents have only hardened the cast of America's destructive mold – a matrix forged with the heat and hammers of the insane Rothschild tribe.

No, the mold cannot be altered, but it can be destroyed down to its base constituent elements and recast in the image that our founding fathers spoke, wrote, and dreamed of.

May God bless America throughout her coming attempt at a divinely inspired transformation such as our forefathers experienced.

Never Before (A Short Short Story)

J. Speer-Williams

The Short Short Story

*I guess Americans had to get burnt by the heat before we could see the light. But somehow ... don't ask me how ...
I made it though.*

We didn't get any damage ... where I live ... that I can remember.

Everything just stopped working.

The first thing I can remember was the downstairs end table lamp had gone and burnt out. I made a mental note to tell Momma about it in the morning.

I had awoken from a dream, a bad one. Something terribly bad had happened in the world, but I just couldn't remember what the dream was about.

I always had a hard time with dreams – remembering what they were all about – something my Momma said was important to do.

“You’re only thirteen years old, Billy,” Momma reminded me. “You’ll get better at it as you grow up. Then when you’re grown up too much ... like me ... you’ll lose that ability.”

“Why’s that, Momma?”

“Well, Billy ... in many ways ... growing old is like becoming a baby again. Then in time, you do become a baby again.”

“I get it, Momma. After awhile you become what the baby was before it was a baby.”

“Yes, Billy ... you’re my smart young man.”

The next thing I remember from the fateful morning after my bad dream was one of my older brother Joey’s made-to-impress smart remarks: “Momma, it’s just a power failure We get ‘em all the time.”

“Well, Mr. Smartass, Mr. Know-it-all,” responded my uncharacteristically frightened mother, “why wouldn’t my Nissan start this morning?”

Momma was a plain-spoken, but loving woman.

Then from a table lamp, to a car, the cascade never stopped.

I have often wondered why so many people died within the first six months without electricity. That didn’t happen to earlier Americans.

Lincoln didn't have any electricity. Andrew Jackson must have used candles. Did George Washington have electricity at Mount Vernon?

No, but during the times of those luminaries, almost everyone grew food, at least on a small scale.

And those people had fireplaces with plenty of cut and stacked firewood. And most had a horse, without any sophisticated and very complicated electronics attached. Cars were yet to be invented and mass produced.

People back then lived without any telephones, computers, or bank accounts.

Fax machines and television sets were science fiction, while home computers weren't even fiction.

Living on a couple of acres in Kentucky helped the three of us (Momma, Joey, and me) to survive for a space, but my main concern was my twelve-year-old coon hound, Coco. We really needed Coco for hunting, plus I really loved the old girl.

Much too soon, our hardscrabble garden of turnips, carrots, onions, and other stuff gave out, along with our firewood. The table and chairs went next, along with parts of our old house.

We all panicked when smoke from the fireplace filled our house. With no way to clean out our chimney, all we could do was to throw snow on the fire, open the windows and doors, and freeze.

Everything I once took for granted became precious to me. Stuff like running water, TV movies, school, video games, and the Cincinnati Reds.

But, I tell you straight out, without our old water well and hand pump, we wouldn't have lasted a week.

And we wouldn't have lasted much longer than a month without my father's old 12 Gauge Winchester. We ate a lot of birds, ducks, and squirrels ... and twice some turkeys, all thanks to that shotgun ... and ... ole Coco.

I'd like to know what percentage of survivors are gun owners. It's 100% where I live.

It was August, I think, when the world stopped turning. And by winter the power was still out, at least where we lived.

I remember getting really pissed at the assholes in Chicago and New York who weren't helping us poor Kentuckians. I was well into my teens before I learned what I guess everyone else in the country knew long before. It seems that a high-altitude, electromagnetic pulse bomb had fried our national power grid, throwing the entire country into a dark age.

Momma didn't make it through that first winter, and Joey was too weak to help me bury her.

A week or so later, when I was searching through my sock drawer, I found the following handwritten message from Momma:

The melody of your life will emerge after discovering what generates passion within you; it's then that your life will become satisfying.

Then in the following January, or February, I had the problem of burying Joey. All I had left was my ole Coco, my old skinny coonhound, maybe the first to ever exist on one-half of a semi-rotten potato (and skin) a day and some bird feathers with a little meat from time to time.

I was just a boy, but I had to grow up fast, or die.

But far too soon, ole Coco left me too. It's odd, I didn't cry when Joey or Momma died, but I did over Coco. Go figure. I guess I consider dogs to be the most angelic of life's species.

It was over a year, I think, as some days I'd forget to mark my calendar, before the world began to turn again – at least for a couple of hours a day, here and there. For, I'd say, nine years we heard that the power would be fully back on in about nine to twelve months. But forty ton transformers can't be bought off store selves, they have to be built or gifted ... and it seems no one was willing to gift us any.

But losing power has been the least of our problems with all the raw sewage and chemicals in the air. The stuff can sear lungs.

Then the Russians and Chinese came and things got a bit better. But then again they may have been the ones who got things going at all.

Today, I believe what Momma used to say, You can't trust the media. In North Korea, people are forced to listen to propaganda; in America, people do it willingly. Like the Spanish vs. the Basques, the Irish Protestants vs. the Irish Catholics, and the Sunnis vs. the Shias, America is divided between those who want to keep the race war going and those who do not.

All I can do, after living in the dark age for a long time is to tell you stuff you have probably already heard. If I sound mature for my age, it's because I'm repeating some of the things said by neighboring men much older than me. They are all White men who have reasons to be proud of themselves; all are small-game hunters who had also served as officers or non-commissioned officers in the US Marines or Army paratroopers.

In fact, Tim was a First Lieutenant in the 101st Airborne Division (the Screaming Eagles) at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, not far from where we now live near the Mississippi River.

The American government had been taken over by some war nuts called NeoCons, the masters of destruction. They were known as the ...

DESTRUCTION CREW

They had thrown our country into deep debt by financing a lot of wars on innocent people, all under the thin pretense of national security and spreading democracy.

As I'm told by the few old guys I respect, those NeoCons loved to destroy infrastructures: foreign ones with bombs, ours with neglect.

And what was never neglected, because it was never built, was protection for our national power grid.

A small portion of what the unprotected US power grid used to look like

And as I've been told by those same old men ... "Billy, before you were even born, we had the terrible 9/11 disaster. Ever since then, the United States became anathema to all the people outside of the NATO nations. America was ripe for an EMP attack, but it became a political issue in our Congress. Most of the Conservatives wanted to harden our national grid, but the moonbat liberals (the large majority) defeated every attempt in Congress at doing so.

But perhaps we had protected our ability to retaliate, but who knew what was true in those days?"

And as the story goes, Russia and China got together, determining something must be done before the US NeoCons threw the entire world into a holocaust with a nuclear war between Russia and America.

So for years, North Korea, with its crazy leader, a short, fat guy with three names I don't remember, was promoted as a nuclear red herring.

I guess this was done to get the American government to spend even more money on national "defense," even though we spent more on war than China, Russia, Saudi Arabia, India, France, England, Japan, and Germany combined.

But promoting North Korea as a nuclear threat deflected guilt away from both Russia and China, after North Korea may have been the country that set off an EMP bomb over America, thus destroying our national power grid.

The old men I talk to from time to time talk a lot about something they call the Shadow Government.

They tell me that the US intelligence agencies served that secret outfit under the direction of the NeoCons. *

**NeoCons were henchman of the Rothschild banking cartel, who ran the feckless US government, no matter who was elected to office.*

But what those idiots in the US intelligence agencies probably never knew was Russia and China were feeding North Korea the simple low-level technology of how to build and deliver an ...

electromagnetic pulse (EMP) bomb to America.

It was a delivery, I've been told, that could have been done from any old, innocent-looking freighter, from anywhere in the three oceans that surrounded America.

Also, the experts back then said North Korea had the satellites* that could have pinpointed an EMP burst that would have affected the entire American continent.

**From a 13 Aug. 2017 Breitbart News item; According to Dr. Peter Vincent Pry, executive director of the American Congressional Task Force on National and Homeland Security ...*

“We should not be tolerating the North Korean satellites that are orbiting over our country. There are two of them. And the intelligence community is still silent about them.”

One day when Coco and I were out hunting, we came up on a valley that scared the crap outta me. Deep below was what looked like a junk yard with twisted metal and debris scattered everywhere. One of my old codger friends, Timothy, later told me it was probably just a plane that had fallen out of the sky due to the EMP attack.

Did that EMP blast wipe out the availability of food and medicine in our entire nation? I don't really know. I've heard it did and I've heard it didn't. I've also heard that people who were dependent on various anti-depressants, and other drugs, went on homicidal rages when those medical prescriptions were no longer available to them.

But enough of that depressing topic.

Back before we were defeated, we had a fat leader, just like North Korea's.

Our leader was twice as old as the North Korean fat guy, but seemingly no more mature.

Anyway, our president, I can't for the life of me remember his name, had never served in our Armed Forces, and certainly he had never been anywhere in the vicinity of any hot stray bullets or shrapnel, but still he liked to talk tough.

He even engaged the North Korean leader in a shouting match, with each of them trying to out-yell or out-threaten the other.

The “crazy” North Korean leader, however, knew what he was talking about; our blundering president did not have a clue.

Tramp (I think his name was), like most other Americans, thought, “the nerve of that fat-assed bastard. We could quash him and his entire country in minutes.”

But like any street punk from the worst parts of the old Brownsville section of Brooklyn, this president talked like a tough guy. Diplomacy was something this president had no talent or interest in. But the man should have at least hardened our national power grid before he did any tough tawking (as they say on Toity-Toid Street in New York).

President Tramp apparently didn’t give a damn about the ten to twenty million people living within forty miles of thousands of North Korean artillery pieces, all implanted at the DMZ. Also around Seoul were about thirty thousand US troops. I guess our president considered them to be expendable. Collateral damage, don’t you know. The high price of freedom, I suppose.

“At any rate, they would have all been nicely remembered at football, basketball, and baseball games ... if we ever have them again,” said my elder friend Timothy.

“Tim, why didn’t President Tramp stop North Korea with an EMP attack of our own, instead of talking about fire and fury? That way, no one would have had to die, as we could have brought aid to both South and North Korea, while rebuilding South Korea’s power grid? And North Korea?”

We could have rebuilt their power grid after taking out all of their nuclear bomb capability ... and their crazy leader.”

“Yes, Billy, you talk sense,” said ole Tim. “But there’s one thing you’re overlooking. As happened to many in America, an EMP bomb attack over the Korean Peninsula would have quickly burnt down many houses if their electrical wiring had no surge arrester and the wiring was connected to a large power grid system. Billy, what happens is the electrical wiring immediately explodes into flames. But still, I agree that an EMP attack is more humane than using nuclear bombs.”

Talking about people being burnt alive so chilled my soul, I turned to Jason for a change in subject matter. He said the woman who ran for the job of the presidency, back in 2016, was not as crude as the guy elected, but was far more psychopathic.

“She was a part-time lesbian who was heavily corrupted to boot. Also, she was a walking, talking cyber-security risk and a slavish whore to the warmongering NeoCons. With her as president, a nuclear war with Russia would have been a foregone conclusion,” said Jason.

Jason, another older friend who I think might exaggerate from time to time, said that he couldn’t have said the woman was a lesbian back in the 2016 election, because he might have been arrested for something he called a Hate Crime.

Jason also said, backed up by other men, “In many ways, we have more freedom today than we had before the EMP attack. Back then, a thing called Political Correctness cost us our free speech.

“There also was something called the Overton Window, which was the range of ideas the public would accept. That spread was created in the Rothschild-controlled think tanks and put into practice by media pundits and TV personalities.

“That damned Overton Window kept moving into the bizarre until it had most of us all afraid to say much of anything, which led to us not being able to think very much either.”

Anyway, the scene was set with most Americans wanting their US government to send enough nuclear bombs to North Korea that they would show the little fat guy who was the real boss, with nary a care in the world about the lives that would be affected by those bombs.

I think central governments are a reflection of the majority of citizens in a nation. So perhaps some great power decided the US government was too fat, so they put all of us Americans on a diet.

Below are photos given to me by Tim, who is eccentric, but I've never caught him in a lie. Anyway, Tim swears that millions of Americans actually looked like the one just below.

Really, Tim? I don't remember that.

How did they procreate?

How did they ever sleep on their stomachs?

Were there any of the affirmative action laws you've told me so much about that assured them work?

My friend Timothy (nom de plume– The Lovable Contrarian) after he gained a lot of weight, of which he is so proud

As you know I'm fortunate to be living close to these very smart older men who knew the score before the bomb, then lived through its aftermath, and now have a good idea of what's in store for us.

In any event, the attack by North Korea seems to have gone down just as the far wiser Russian and Chinese leaders wanted it to; and it eliminated a super power, who will never again be a super scourge controlled by those f-ing NeoCons.

But as I'm told our main problem now is our one hundred nuclear power plants. You see they all had reactive cores and used fuel rods that had to be kept cool, and it was done with electricity.

Their emergency generators and batteries were only good for seven days, then it became Fukushima (Japanese nuclear disaster) times a hundred. No one knows how many people have died with cancer that was caused by those power plants.

But the Russians and Chinese (who had protected their national power grids) knew the US NeoCons had probably hardened their nuclear capability, but it proved to be not nearly enough, as we were only capable of destroying North Korea, if we even did that.

Any nation that loses its national power grid cannot wage war to any great degree, certainly not when a country decays as fast as America did.

With war as its business model, America had become bankrupted, financially and morally – and the most anti-life nation in recorded history.

So, what did happen to North Korea? Did the US bomb them with what means they still had available after the EMP attack? I really don't know any more about it than you do. If anyone out there in cyberland has any reliable data about it, please pass it on to me.

I'd also like information about how badly America has suffered from the EMP bomb ... such as how many Americans died from it. If America is anything like my little corner of Kentucky, almost everyone without guns and water died from it.

I've heard that some people living near the Mexican and Canadian borders tried walking out of our country. Those who lived to tell the tale said most people followed the freeways that were packed with abandoned cars. But apparently, it didn't do them much good, as they had to get deep into Canada or Mexico before they could find any electric power.

“Wasn't the United States once a free, mostly educated nation made up of God-fearing people?” I once asked Timothy.

“Yes,” said Tim, “but the Rothschild NeoCons, who controlled our entire government, our major media, and our education was well on its way of convincing most Americans that our social order and life itself was just about meaningless. They used some fiendishly clever ways to disparage and degrade our art, our history, and our racial pride until bit by bit they destroyed most of our Western culture and America sank into a dark fog of nihilism – life without meaning.”

“So, I guess, when Americans lost their formative religion, as you always call it, Tim, we lost our mojo. But what I can’t understand is why did our government not protect our power grid. Was it impossible to do? Did it cost too much?”

“It was definitely possible to do and the cost seemed comparatively low, when considered next to our war budget back then,” said ole Tim, looking at me with that sad face of his.

“Based on a Congressional EMP Commission Report, years before the attack,” said Tim, continuing on the subject that seemed to make him sadder as he spoke, “it would have cost us only about two billion dollars.”

“I guess that’s a lot of money,” I responded, having no real concept of how much money.

“Billy, our budget for making war on innocent people was over $610 billion a year. That means we could have hardened our power grid with the cost of one or two days of what it cost us to destroy infrastructures on foreign soils.”

“How ... how do you remember all this stuff that happened before the EMP attack, Tim?”

“I stored it all on my computer.”

“Huh? I’ve heard that all the storage on computers was wiped out with the EMP attack.”

“Yes, most of it was. A lot of people made the mistake of backing up their data on magnetic hard drives. But, Billy, my boy ... I got lucky.”

“How?”

“I used to follow all the work of a brilliant young man named Mike Adams ... he was known as the Health Ranger. He told me I could protect my data if I stored it on a Sony Optical Disc, which is a stacked cartridge of Blue Ray discs that he said would be completely immune to EMP events as no magnetism was involved.”

“Well ... our leaders must have been crazy not to have protected our power grid.”

“Yes, exactly. But, they were also stupid. Hold on, I want you to read something,” Tim said while he went searching through a huge stack of papers on his desk.

“Here, read this. It’s part of an article that I’ve saved written by someone called J. (Jack) Speer-Williams. He explains just how prolonged periods of criminally creates stupidity.”

And That’s the Meaning of Life

Is life without meaning? Does one’s life amount to anything? Are our dark nights of the soul proof that life, no matter what form it takes, amounts to nothing? Is the grand mosaic of life nothing more than the law of the jungle?

Have the nihilists found the true meaning of life, which is life has no meaning? So, why not get what you can while you can?

Without our inner voice, our conscience, guiding us into the light of righteousness, we lose consciousness, and thus become less aware.

A moral, well-functioning conscience establishes a growing consciousness, awakening us to an ever-higher frame of ethics, until at last we serve ourselves by serving others. It is then that life reveals its precious meaning – Always Serve Yourself By Serving Others .

But a dark force had thrust a once great nation into the maw and gullet of a beast, an ever-devouring pig, ever ravenous for more human life and souls.

And without knowing the secret of life, we justified the bombings, invasions, and occupations of Middle Eastern countries, while bringing the diseased, the illiterate, the unskilled of sub-Saharan Africa into the West, calling them Syrian refugees, instead of helping them where they lived.

Serving criminality is a disservice to both predator and prey.

Agitprop (the propaganda used by the Rothschilds' Bolsheviks during the 1917 Russian Revolution) is used today on our streets by the Social Justice Warriors and cultural Marxists and their NeoCon masters.

These foolhardies are eradicating their limited consciousness, with little understanding of what they are doing to themselves and others.

Such cretins secretly serve themselves, while actively pretending to serve others. But the only “others” they serve are their diabolic and insane masters.

A world manufactured by such dying souls will be one of chaos and misery for everyone.

The Rothschilds and their gang of miscreant NeoCons had a motto: Order Out of Chaos. But the Controllers will only increase chaos for us, while reserving order for only themselves.

Today, the ignorant bring down statues of marble and stone; soon they will bring down men of flesh, blood, and bone ... unless ... a major national cataclysm occurs that disrupts the NeoCon control mechanisms of central government and its Ministry of Propaganda, the mainstream media.

After such a catastrophe, our slate would be wiped clean; and perhaps Divine Providence would then be kind enough to give us one more go at a Constitutional Republic.

At our point of societal decay, I’m afraid that’s the best we can hope for.

Will our immediate future be a messy unrest?

We already have that, thanks to the Rothschilds’ media and funding people like George Soros.

What’s coming will go nameless for decades.

“Well, Tim, I guess I understand what Mr. Speer-Williams was trying to say ... but ...”

“Just remember this, Billy, my boy: Ignorance, poverty, and drugs are the godparents of societal collapse.”

Today, the Russians and Chinese seem to be running America and the two-hours-a-week television news. Everything seems better, with no more neo-Nazis, Ku Klux Klaners, White Nationalists, or any White Supremacists in the news ... just gun-toting White people where I live.

And of course there are no A-rabs flooding our country, opioid crises, Federal Reserve banks, or Social Justice Warriors, cultural Marxists, Black Lives Matter protesters, or any transgenders in the news (or in existence) since there are no more NeoCons controlling the media and government.

And when America went into the dump, they could no longer fund the terrorists. So, presto! No more terrorists.

According to Big John, a hermit who lives a few miles down the dirt road from me, “When America lost her military power, the Rothschild Banking Cartel and their NeoCons also lost their control over war, the international economy, and the lives of people everywhere. Better to live with peace under Russia, than with war against innocents under the Rothschilds and NeoCons.”

War is not romantic,

it's coarse,

it's rough,

it's ugly,
it's shameful.

And so, in today's postwar America, we have electricity for at least two days a week ... for almost every week ... leastwise where I live.

And that, my dear friends, is the story, as has been told to me, of an empire that could destruct but not construct infrastructures.

P.S. If you'd like to email me, please have patience waiting for my reply, as Timothy's old computer doesn't work for days at a time.

Thank goodness ole Tim is a friggin' genius.

P.P.S. Much thanks to Tim and others for editing and re-writing portions of this piece for me. All the big words belong to Tim.

P.P.P.S. And if there's any White, like-minded ladies of child-bearing age living in Kentucky, I'd like to meet you. After all, we have a great responsibility of carrying our race forward. And you can rest assured that while I'm a White heterosexual, I am not any kind of homophobic, misogynistic, racist, xenophobic, male deplorable.

And if you've got an ole hunting dog, I really want to meet you.
